In the opulent and exclusive neighborhood of Cleveland's Millionaires Row, amidst the stately mansions and sprawling lawns, a chilling series of misfortunes and unsolved murders unfolded, casting a dark shadow over the city's gilded age.

One fateful evening in 1919, the wealthy and prominent Dr. Sherman Bronson and his beautiful wife, Thelma, were brutally murdered in their grand home. The crime sent shockwaves through the community, but despite an exhaustive investigation, the killer remained at large.

Years later, tragedy struck again when wealthy industrialist Albert Wickwire was found dead in his bathtub. The circumstances surrounding his death were suspicious, and rumors of foul play swirled through the city.

As the years passed, more misfortunes plagued the residents of Millionaires Row. A devastating fire destroyed the magnificent home of Samuel Mather, the founder of Cleveland Trust Company. The enigmatic death of Mildred Wickwire, Albert's widow, added to the growing sense of unease.

The Victims

Dr. Sherman Bronson and Thelma Bronson: A prominent doctor and his beautiful wife, brutally murdered in their own home.

Albert Wickwire: A wealthy industrialist found dead in his bathtub under mysterious circumstances.

Mildred Wickwire: Albert's widow, whose death remains shrouded in mystery.
